

Only those who were alleged to have been exposed but whose actual exposure could not be verified have been omitted. This practice can perhaps be justified on the basis that all human beings contain radium, obtained from their exposure to food or water on our radioactive planet, yet we are not all considered radium cases because of these environmental exposures.

This report could not have been prepared without the help of many members of Argonne's support staff. The largest contributions were made by artist Michele Szawars, word processors Barbara Salbege and Judith Robson, and editor Karen Haugen. To all contributors, I am grateful.
