

a point where it is feasible to employ computer searches of a data base on thermodynamic and mechanical properties with the objective of identifying the best coating compositions for wear resistance. As a result, industry should be able to systematically implant less expensive substrate materials with coatings that have low friction and wear properties.