Dear Jim,

The enclosed set of glossy prints were made for you. They are not satisfactory since the art department here destroyed the original negatives, and had to redraw the illustrations quickly. As a result, the product is second rate. However I was aware of the urgency and your forthcoming meeting in Florida, so I accepted these realizing that no prints was a much worse situation than bad prints. If you wish to reproduce any of these, you may do so with my permission. I am planning to have these redrawn from scratch by the artist I know at Hopkins, but that may take about a month. If the final draft for publication of your material and the publisher's deadlines are sometime in September or so, then I shall be pleased to send you newly drawn, high quality illustrations for publication.

I was somewhat distraught when the art and photography department here goofed on this matter, and there is little I can do but curse. Please let me know of your need for publication, and I will try to comply.

With my thanks and warmest personal regards, I am

Very sincerely yours,
